Coronavirus Cluster At Hawaiian Airlines Ignites Outbreak At Oahu Gyms

At least two dozen Hawaiian Airlines employees contracted COVID-19 at a training in late June. One infected employee who visited a pair of Oahu gyms set off a second disease cluster.

There are now at least two dozen COVID-19 infections connected to a Hawaiian Airlines flight attendant training last month.

The training program started on June 24 at the airline's Honolulu headquarters. The airline said some employees who attended the training reported feeling ill a few days later. By July 2, eight employees had tested positive for the virus.

The number of positive cases has since tripled.

One infected airline employee, who visited a pair of Oahu gyms after the training started but before he or she learned they had contracted the virus, set off a new infection cluster at the two gyms. There are now 20 positive COVID-19 cases connected to infection outbreaks at those gyms, which state officials have not named. That makes 44 cases in total that tie back to the training.

In response to the disease cluster, Hawaiian Airlines canceled its flight attendant trainings for two weeks to facilitate a “deep clean” of its facilities, according to airline spokeswoman Ann Botticelli.

All of the program's instructors were tested and about 60 employees who participated in the training program were asked to self-quarantine and monitor their health, Botticelli said.

Before you go . . .

For the past several months our nonprofit newsroom has worked beyond our normal capacity to provide accurate information, push for accountability, amplify smart ideas and new voices, and double down on facts and context to write deeply reported local stories.

The truth is, our evolution as a public service news organization over the past 10 years has prepared us for this moment in time, when what we do matters the most.

Reader support keeps our small newsroom afloat. If you value the work of our journalists, please consider making a tax-deductible gift.
